Faculty members from Michigan State University visit OUAVM

Five faculty members from Michigan State University (MSU) visited OUAVM on May 17 to pay a courtesy call on the president. They also toured the Large Animal Hospital and Clinical Research Building and talked about industrial animals in a lecture at the facility (organized by the Tokachi Veterinarian Association and supported by OUAVM).

This visit was made because the Industrial Animal Clinical Research Building of OUAVM was used for an industrial animal workshop organized by the Tokachi Veterinarian Association and the National Agricultural Insurance Association (NOSAI) of Tokachi, which has had a relationship with MSU over the last eight years. In the past eight years NOSAI Tokachi has dispatched veterinarians to MSU to acquire knowledge and technology on dairy farming and industrial animal medical care.

After a courtesy call on President Kiyoshi Okuda and Vice-president for Research Noboru Inoue, the party of MSU faculty members toured the Large Animal Hospital and Clinical Research Building and the Diagnostic Center for Animal Health and Food Safety with Professors Hisashi Inokuma and Norio Yamagishi (Department of Applied Veterinary Medicine) and Professor Yasuo Nambo (Research Center for Global Agromedicine) as guides. The faculty members from MSU, which has excellent veterinary medicine educational facilities, seemed to be highly impressed with our facilities.

At an information exchange session and industrial animal lecture with Professor Motozumi Matsui (Department of Applied Veterinary Medicine) as an interpreter, participants actively exchanged views regarding various issues on cattle reproduction.
